In an exciting development for students and professionals, Devi Ahilya Vishwavidyalaya (DAVV) and IIT Indore have partnered and introduced Mandarin language courses. The initiative aims to bridge India's growing expertise in software development with Taiwan's global leadership in semiconductor and chip manufacturing.

The partnership offers several key benefits, including student exchange programmes, collaborative research opportunities, and faculty development initiatives.

"Participants will also gain access to lucrative job opportunities in Taiwan's high-tech industry, providing a pathway for expanded Indo-Taiwan cooperation," said Prof Rajiv Dixit, director of college development council at DAVV.

Hao Lu, the newly appointed Mandarin instructor at DAVV, met with the university officials to discuss the potential of the courses. Her involvement shows the importance of language skills in enhancing bilateral ties between India and Taiwan.

This initiative is expected to attract students and professionals eager to explore opportunities in Taiwan's booming tech sector, fostering stronger economic and academic partnerships between the two nations.
